

Coeliac Disease and Gluten

Coeliac disease is an autoimmune disease triggered by gluten. Treatment is to follow a gluten free (GF) diet for life.

Gluten is a protein found in wheat, barley and rye. Wheat is the most widely consumed cereal in the UK. The GF diet requires the elimination of staple foods including bread, flour and pasta. Gluten is also found in cakes, pastries and biscuits and also in foods that you may not expect, such as some sauces, soups, ready meals and many sausages.

Elimination of wheat, barley and rye-containing ingredients from the diet results in the removal of a number of staple foods. This can result in a restricted and potentially unbalanced nutritional intake.

Diagnosis: Coeliac disease should be diagnosed with a positive blood result (tissue transglutaminase TTG) and confirmed by a duodenal biopsy, taken while the patient is still consuming gluten.

Referral: Following a positive serology, referral should be made to a Gastroenterologist for biopsy. They will then refer to the Dietitian for dietary input.

Gluten-Free foods NHS regulations (England)

Following a consultation on the availability gluten-free (GF) foods at NHS expense in primary care in England, the Department of Health and Social Care (DHSC) announced in February 2018 that GF food prescribing would be restricted to GF breads and GF mixes only. A second consultation took place in August 2018 and considered the amendments to regulations needed to bring this change into effect. The outcome of this consultation was published by DHSC on 6th November 2018.

The Amendment Regulations were laid before Parliament in November 2018 and have come into force on 4th December 2018. See Table overleaf for the full list of GF foods available on prescription.

All other products can be purchased directly from supermarkets, manufacturers of GF foods, or online retailers.

Further information:

The Department of Health and Social Care consultation outcome and guidance can be found on www.gov.uk and searching for gluten free consultation, or here
